It gives all the data about autos in nitty gritty shape so as the outcome in devours overwhelming asset of PC regarding .Excision of the median and ulnar nerves at the wrist for Giant cell tumour of bone: is it really necessary? We reviewed the results of excising the median and ulnar nerves at the wrist for the treatment of giant cell tumour of bone. Between 1981 and 2001 at our institution, 77 patients (82 sides) had nerve excision for a giant cell tumour. All of the patients underwent thorough assessment including electromyography, nerve conduction studies and clinical evaluation. The median nerve was excised with division of the superficial palmar branch in all patients, with two patients also having the subbrachial trunk excised. The ulnar nerve was excised with division of the superficial palmar branch in only 10/25 patients with this information available. At mean follow-up of 4 years (range 1.3 to 17 years), nerve grafting was required in 60% of the patients. Of the 15 patients with nerve grafting, no patient required a revision of the nerve graft. Seventeen patients had a further surgery for a recurrent tumour. Three of these patients were operated on after a mean follow-up of 3 years (range 1 to 6 years), with none requiring a revision of the primary nerve graft. The median duration of the nerve excision was 2 years (range 1 to 6 years), and the median total follow-up was 6 years (range 1.3 to 17 years). The mean duration of the nerve graft was 3 years (range 1.6 to 6.5 years). In summary, we do not believe that excising the median and ulnar nerves at the wrist is necessary for the treatment of giant cell tumour of bone. These cases add strength to the conclusions from other studies. In situations in which the median and ulnar nerves at the wrist remain in continuity, excision of the median nerve was associated with less nerve grafting than excision of the ulnar nerve.
